CHALLENGE

The Murray A. Percival Company was founded in 1960 and subsequently incorporated in the state of Michigan. Shortly thereafter, the Murray Percival Company was approached by the Electrovert Corporation, which it still represents today, to sell its printed circuit board wave soldering equipment. At that time, the use of printed circuit boards was still relatively rare.

Fifty years ago, the Murray Percival Company was a pioneer in servicing an emerging industry, one that has become a key component in the worldwide market of today's manufactured goods. The Murray Percival Company is now a leading supplier to the Midwest's electronics industry and offers thousands of products, many of which can be purchased simply and directly from its website.

Prior to launching its website and choosing Hitachi Ecommerce as its vendor, the Murray Percival Company was relying on hard-copy catalogs and a time-consuming phone ordering system. These manual processes made ordering items difficult, and was prone to errors in pricing.

“In the past, our customers would have to call us for pricing and then they would have to go submit a purchase order, hopefully with the correct pricing,” said Murray Percival III, General Manager at the Murray Percival Company. “With Hitachi Ecommerce, customers are able to get on our website, log in and see their customer-specific pricing, which allows us to process their orders more efficiently. There is no extra step for them where they have to get ahold of us. They can log in and check at their leisure.”

“Our main pain points before the site were reaching out to our customers and expanding into national territories. With the ecommerce site now, we’re able to reach out to customers on a national level.”

SOLUTION

In order to better serve its customers with a speedy, easy-to-use ordering system, the Murray Percival Company implemented Hitachi Ecommerce. By moving its entire catalog online, the Murray Percival Company was able to make order entry and processing automated and efficient through Hitachi Ecommerce’s integrated, end-to-end solution.

“It was a big changeover,” said Mark Percival Jr., Ecommerce Manager and Marketing at the Murray Percival Company. “Our main pain points before the site were reaching out to our customers and expanding into national territories. With the ecommerce site now, we’re able to reach out to customers on a national level.”

The Murray Percival Company is able to provide excellent service to its customer base by using advanced order management functionality within Hitachi Ecommerce. Regardless of where a customer is located or which specific industry group he or she belongs to, product lists and pricing are targeted to each individual. A streamlined web design and simplified checkout process make navigation simple.

Order placement and fulfillment is also streamlined from the back end. Hitachi Ecommerce is fully integrated with the Murray Percival Company’s ERP system, Microsoft Dynamics GP. Web orders are automatically pushed into Microsoft Dynamics GP and once the order is fulfilled, the shipment details and tracking information flow back into Hitachi Ecommerce, so that orders can be tracked by customers in the self-service portal. Other integrations include inventory, pricing, payment, and aging/credit limit.

“It was super important that we were integrated,” Murray Percival III said. “We didn’t want to have to update two different systems. Linking our inventory on hand and pricing stored in our ERP system was very important to us.”

A customer can log into the self-service portal to view any and all tracking information for shipments, detailed product information, and easily drill down into particular products. Customers can manage their order history, track orders, manage their address book, update their credit card wallet, and view invoices all within the self-service portal. With customers able to access this information at any time, customer service representatives’ time is freed up to focus on higher value-added work.
